Women in the construction industry can experience gendered challenges when it comes to health and safety. CPWR – The Center for Construction Research and Training has curated resources on their Women in the Trades web page that apprenticeship professionals can share with sponsors to support them in creating a safer work environment. Included are resources that help women, transgender, and nonbinary workers find personal protective equipment that fits; guidance materials that pregnant individuals can use when consulting with doctors about working safely and returning to work; best practices for portable toilets and sanitation for women on construction sites; and more.

Featured Guest: Anjanet Banuelos Bolanos

We are excited to welcome Anjanet Banuelos Bolanos as our featured guest for our March webinar. Anjanet joined a preapprenticeship program for women in the trades as a single mom hoping to build a better life for herself and her family. After pre-apprenticeship, she entered the Construction Craft Laborers apprenticeship program where she earned her journey worker credential. She is now a Field Representative for the Laborers' International Union of North America (LiUNA) Local 737, and she serves on the board of Oregon Tradeswomen, the preapprenticeship program that helped her get on her path. Anjanet is a fierce advocate for women in the trades, both in her union and across the nation.
